On June 15, 1794, Vesuvius exploded in a full-scale eruption that devastated the town of Torre del Greco and showered ash on the city of Naples. Bertrand Barère de Vieuzac of the Committee of Public Safety described the eruption for the benefit of the National Convention, using it to demonstrate his point that nature itself was on the side of the French Revolution: "Nature, from the heights of Vesuvius, has just commanded Naples not to release its fleet that was going to join the English ...
